

Human miracle

A CHANCE meeting on a plane between Emilio Estevez and longtime Bill Clinton pal Rolando Gonzalez-Bunster turned into a magic screening of "The Way" Wednesday night. The movie, directed by Estevez and starring his father, Martin Sheen, is about a spiritual journey across Spain's Camino de Santiago de Compostela. Sheen's character goes on the Pyrenees pilgrimage with the ashes of his only son, and three others looking for a new path. The screening, to benefit the Walkabout Foundation, which works to find a cure for paralysis and donates wheelchairs to those in need, happened after Estevez ran into Gonzalez-Bunster, a Georgetown University friend of Clinton, on a flight to Madrid last year. Rolando's son, Luis, was paralyzed in a 1994 car accident, and he and his sister, Carolina, launched the foundation in 2009 with a 540-mile family journey along the Camino. Luis completed the route using the strength of his arms. Estevez said, "You often think of miracles as some otherworldly thing, but they are very human." Describing how he met Rolando on a plane, he said, "Life is full of those miracles, and it is our obligation to pay attention to them. We would not be here tonight if Rolando hadn't had the courage to reach out." Clinton, with daughter Chelsea, gave the keynote speech and praised Luis' courage, describing him as, "the only person I know ever to cross Spain with the power of his arms and his heart." He added, "Rolando has now convinced me I am going to make this trip with him. If I can get to where I am in good enough shape, maybe we'll do it. Thank you all for making my life so much richer." Toast me two times

THE after-after party hasn't quite yet upstaged the after-party as the place to be following a premiere. But a cadre of well-connected well-wishers descended on Madame Geneva on Wednesday following "The Ides of March" after-party at the Metropolitan Club to toast the movie's co-writer, Beau Willimon. Jay Carson, the chief executive of Mayor Bloomberg and Bill Clinton's climate initiative, Tony winner John Gallagher Jr., playwright Sam Forman, Vanity Fair contributing editor Christopher Tennant and actress Jessica Joffe drank with fashion writers, film suits and politicians. Willimon also wrote the play on which "Ides" is based.
